U. S. CONSIDERS GIVING TAIWAN DESTROYERS By Associated Press

When U.S. and Taiwanese officials gather behind closed doors to discuss which weapons the United States is willing to sell, the $4.4 billion question will be whether Taiwan gets the go-ahead to buy the Aegis destroyers it says it needs to counter a buildup of Chinese missiles.

The talks Monday and Tuesday in Washington are especially sensitive because of their profound political implications. China has said it would be compelled to react harshly if Taiwan acquires Aegis warships. Taiwan views its request as a test of U.S. support in the face of China's continuing buildup of offensive missiles.

China regards Taiwan as Chinese territory, separated by civil war. The United States has a "one China" policy, but under the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979 it is obligated to insure a "sufficient" defense for Taiwan. The Clinton administration is divided over the weapons sales.

The Pentagon believes they are justified for Taiwan's self-defense but the White House and State Department worry more about provoking China. Virtually all international arms sales have political implications, but this one is especially political because of the growing belief in Congress that China is bent on regaining control of Taiwan at any cost. Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon said Friday he could not discuss the substance of the U.S.-Taiwan talks.

The Washington Post, citing anonymous sources, reported Monday that the Pentagon will recommend against selling the Aegis destroyers to Taiwan for the time being, but will call for further assessment of Taiwan's needs and, in the mean time, recommend selling the island long-range radar systems. In strictly military terms, there is little quessee U.S. CONSIDERS Page 3

THOUSANDS PROTEST WORLD BANK By John Kifner

Thousands of protesters looking to shut down meetings of world financial leaders swarmed the streets of Washington, D.C. Sunday, clashing briefly with police who moved firmly to quash any unrest.

The finance ministers and other delegates were escorted by police so that their meetings could take place as scheduled. Sunday evening, they tacitly acknowledged the shouting on the streets by conceding in a communique issued by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) that their role had become a matter "of growing public debate."

They acknowledged a wide-spread fear that "the benefits of the world economy" are "not reaching everyone, especially in the developing countries." But they offered no new prescriptions, other than some reforms of the IMF's internal operations that are already under way.

FA A PANEL TO URGE 737 CHANGES By New York Times

A Federal Aviation Administration engineering board is expected to recommend design changes in the rudder of the Boeing 737, the world's most widely used jetliner.

FAA officials said Sunday that preliminary recommendations prepared by the board also urged more rudder inspections and changes in the training of crews to deal with rudder problems. "The board considered the likelihood of problems with the 737's rudder so small that it did not recommend immediate action," said Thomas E. McSweeny, the agency's Associate Administrator for Regulation and Certification.

BROAD NET OF BLAME IN BOMBING By Steven Lee Myers

In the weeks before the bombing of the Chinese Embassy in Belgrade last May, NATO was under tremendous pressure to escalate its war against Yugoslavia. The alliance's supreme commander urgently asked for 2,000 targets inside Serbia, a number some aides considered arbitrary and far too high for a country the size of Ohio.

Having begun the war for Kosovo with too few targets and the unrealistic hope of a quick victory, NATO had to scramble for new ones. In this atmosphere the CIA submitted its first targeting proposal of the war. It was selected by its Counter-Proliferation Division, which had no particular expertise either the Balkans or in picking bombing targets. The target was then accepted, officials said, without further vetting by the military and assigned to be struck by a B 2 bomber, which flew from the United States on May 7 and dropped five satellite-quided bombs on the target without ever seeing it.

In fact, it was the Chinese Embassy. It was described in a secret document given to President Clinton for his approval as a warehouse that was the headquarters of Yugoslav army procurement. The document, provided to The New York Times by a military officer, included a satellite photograph, a casualty estimate and a description of the site. The only thing that turned out to be accurate was the casualty estimate.

U.S. CONSIDERS From Page 1 tion that Taiwan can justify its desire for warships equipped with the highly advanced Aegis weapons system, which is designed to defend against aircraft and missiles.

Taiwan wants to buy four of the warships, which go for $1.1 billion a piece, plus a variety of other advanced weapons. Adm. Dennis Blair, Commander in Chief of U.S. Pacific Command, with responsibility for U.S. forces in the Asia-Pacific region, has made clear that he believes Taiwan faces a serious missile threat from China.

"Currently, China has deployed about 200 ballistic missiles against Taiwan and is adding about 50 missiles per year," Blair said in a speech in Washington on March 16. "Though these missiles are terror weapons, too inaccurate to hit military targets with any confidence, as the numbers increase and their accuracy improves, they will pose a military threat to Taiwan."

Blair has not said publicly whether he favors selling Taiwan the four Arleigh Burke-class destroyers with Aegis radar. Douglas Paal, president of the Asia Pacific Policy Center, said he expects the Clinton administration to approve a sale of destroyers to Taiwan but without the Aegis weapons system included. This would give Taiwan an improved capability to defend against anti-ship missiles and aircraft but not against the ballistic missiles that China has deployed in Fujian province, just across the 100-mile Taiwan Strait.

Among other weapons on Taiwan's wish list, Paal believes President Clinton is likely to approve the sale of longer-range radars but not Harm anti-radiation missiles or Amraam air-to-air missiles.
